

Rose Ceremony

(A rose ceremony is usually done at the end of vows being presented, yet it has been used as the wedding ceremony and exchange of rings at the end.)

It is now my very sacred privilege to be the first to address you as husband and wife, which, of course, you now are. And to present you with your very first gift as a married couple. In the language of flowers, a red Rose is the symbol of Love. My gift to you is the gift of love.

Will you please exchange your red roses? In this exchange, you have given each other your first gift as husband and wife which is the gift of love. It would be our hope that, wherever you may make your home, there will be an especially appointed place in it for red roses. That on each succeeding anniversary of this holy occasion, you will celebrate it, at least in part, by each of you bringing, to the appointed place, a red rose. You will again be acknowledging your love, commitments and holy vows you have made this day before God and those present.

In Every marriage, it is sometimes difficult to find words to resolve certain issues that may arise. If some of these issues should come too your marriage, if either of you will remember and bring, to the appointed place, a red rose, the other will see it and accept it. Because Love makes everything all Right!
